

SUMMARY OF PUBLIC COMMENTS

Joint Annual Report from Virginia's Conversion Health Foundations

October 18, 2013 Letter Request from the Virginia Consortium of Health Philanthropy

During the June 11, 2014 meeting of JCHC, Jeanne Zeidler spoke on behalf of the Virginia Consortium of Health Philanthropy to ask that Joint Commission members consider whether there is a continued need for a joint annual report on charitable activities from Virginia's Conversion Health Foundations. One public comment was received regarding the proposal to discontinue the reporting requirement; Ms. Zeidler commented in support of the proposal.

Ms. Zeidler, in her written comment submitted on behalf of the Virginia Consortium of Health Philanthropy, notes that much has changed since the requirement for the report was initiated by JCHC in 1998 in HJR 179. "Health conversion foundations were relatively new then and there were only a few. Their value and impact was unknown. At that time, there was interest in ensuring these entities' resources would be used to benefit those within their communities and this report was a way to demonstrate this impact. Today, however there are many ways in which foundations can be transparent about their community investments and impact." Additional points made by Ms. Zeidler include:

- There "are now 14 Virginia conversion foundations, which utilize social media (Facebook, Twitter) and websites to communicate with their community and other stakeholders."
- The foundations' IRS 990 forms, which are posted on GuideStar making them available to the public, require "increasingly more information each year. Through these mechanisms as well as community presentations utilizing local media outlets and through annual reports, these foundations do an excellent job of sharing how their resources enhance their communities and improve the health status of those who live in their service areas."
- The foundations "are committed to effectively communicating our charitable work to you and all who are interested. However, I'm sure you can understand our desire to avoid an unnecessary expenditure of time, effort, and financial resources."

VIRGINIA'S HEALTH CONVERSION FOUNDATIONS – REPORT TO THE JOINT COMMISSION ON HEALTH CARE

2013 EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

During its 1998 Session, the Virginia General Assembly passed House Joint Resolution (HJR) 179, requesting an annual update from the conversion health foundations regarding their charitable activities. In response, the Virginia Consortium for Health Philanthropy is submitting its 2013 Report to the Joint Commission on Health Care, which outlines the activities of Virginia's conversion foundations. This is the 16th annual report from the foundations.

- Virginia's 14 conversion health foundations are: The Alleghany Foundation, Bedford Community Health Foundation, Bernardine Franciscan Sisters Foundation, The Cameron Foundation, Danville Regional Foundation, Greensville Memorial Foundation, The Harvest Foundation, Jenkins Foundation, John Randolph Foundation, Obici Healthcare Foundation, Portsmouth General Hospital Foundation, Potomac Health Foundation, Williamsburg Health Foundation, and Wythe-Bland Foundation. Eight (8) of these foundations are the result of sales and/or lease to for-profit entities and, therefore, are required by HJR 179 to report. This year, 10 of the foundations are reporting within this document.
- A number of other Virginia foundations also support health-related services, but are not the result of a conversion. Among these are: Augusta Health Foundation, Carilion Clinic, Centra Health Foundation, The Community Foundation Serving Richmond and Central Virginia, Mary Washington Hospital Foundation and Stafford Hospital Center Foundation, Northern Virginia Health Foundation, Potomac Health Foundation, Richmond Memorial Health Foundation, Riverside Health System Foundation, Sentara Health Foundation, and the Virginia Health Care Foundation. The Virginia Consortium for Health Philanthropy provides a forum for member foundations throughout the Commonwealth (including both conversion foundations and foundations supporting health-related services) to collaborate on projects and exchange information about health-related needs, programs, and other issues.
- Virginia's conversion foundations represent an important resource in Virginia for addressing pressing health issues at the local level. All of these foundations have specific geographic service areas, which together serve 34% of Virginia's cities and counties. Those service areas are primarily in the Central and Coastal regions of Virginia, but also include several jurisdictions in the Valley and Mountain regions and Northern Virginia (see the map in Appendix A).
- In Fiscal Year 2013, the 10 conversion foundations reporting herein held $894.3 million in combined assets. Total grantmaking for these foundations in fiscal year (FY) 2013 was $36.6 million, and health and human services-related grants totaled $26.1 million. Categories of health-related funding for the foundations include, but are not limited to, access to health services, health education and health promotion, human services, nonprofit infrastructure development, health workforce development, capital investments, and planning studies. Since 2006, categories have been expanded to provide more specificity in reporting, so that new initiatives or increased emphasis in certain funding areas can be highlighted.

- The largest proportion of health and human services grants was awarded for projects related to access to health services ($11.6 million; 44%) - a continuing priority for the foundations. This general category includes access to medical, dental and mental health (as well as substance abuse) services. While serving Virginia's uninsured is a vital component of the conversion foundations' missions, it is clear that is not the exclusive focus. The resources under each foundation's stewardship came from the community it serves, and it is appropriate for the foundations to strive to serve each of their communities as a whole, as opposed to one segment of the population.
- There are opportunities for collaboration between the conversion foundations and the Commonwealth that could be coordinated to have a greater impact on improving health and increasing access to health care services for Virginians. Those opportunities include: (1) coordinating efforts to collect and report information on community health status and service needs; (2) avoiding duplication of effort by sharing information about local health programs; (3) communicating information about new state health initiatives that may have a direct impact on local health care delivery systems; and, (4) participating in collaborative funding efforts to meet identified needs on local or regional levels.
- The conversion foundations are making a significant contribution to improving the health status of residents in the communities they serve. They are dedicated to strengthening existing community-based nonprofits and helping to establish new organizations that may be needed to address pressing health needs. There is tremendous long-term potential for these foundations to assist in bringing lasting and positive change to the health of Virginia's residents.

I. INTRODUCTION

During its 1998 Session, the Virginia General Assembly passed House Joint Resolution (HJR) 179. This resolution requests that foundations formed in Virginia as a result of hospitals converting from not-for-profit to for-profit status annually update the Joint Commission on Health Care on their charitable activities. Several foundations that were formed as a result of hospitals that sold their assets to other not-for-profit health systems are included in this report as well. These organizations, commonly called conversion health foundations were asked to provide information on: (1) the total dollar value expended on charitable activities; (2) health care programs and other projects funded during the year; (3) the types of indigent and uninsured populations served; and, (4) ways in which the activities of the foundations and the Commonwealth could be coordinated to have a greater impact on providing care to the indigent and reducing the number of uninsured persons.

House Joint Resolution 179 also directed the Joint Commission on Health Care to involve the foundations in its ongoing planning and assessment of initiatives and other actions to address the problems of the Commonwealth's indigent and uninsured populations.

In response to this resolution, the Virginia Consortium for Health Philanthropy, an informal association of health foundations, is pleased to submit its 16th annual report to the Joint Commission on Health Care. It provides an overview of the conversion foundations' fiscal year 2013 activities and illustrates the contribution these organizations are making to improve the lives of residents in many regions of the state.

II. OVERVIEW OF VIRGINIA'S CONVERSION FOUNDATIONS

Virginia is the home of 14 conversion health foundations: The Alleghany Foundation, Bedford Community Health Foundation, Bernardine Franciscan Sisters Foundation, The Cameron Foundation, Danville Regional Foundation, Greensville Memorial Foundation, The Harvest Foundation, Jenkins Foundation, John Randolph Foundation, Obici Healthcare Foundation, Portsmouth General Hospital Foundation, Potomac Health Foundation, Williamsburg Health Foundation, and the Wythe-Bland Foundation. Six (6) (italicized above) are not required to report, as they were not the result of sales and/or lease to for-profit entities. This year, Bernardine Franciscan Sisters, Greensville Memorial Foundation, Harvest, and Portsmouth General are not reporting in this document.

In 2013, the 10 reporting conversion foundations held $894.3 million in combined assets. Total grantmaking for these foundations in fiscal year (FY) 2013 was $36.6 million; and health and human services-related grants totaled just under $26.1 million.

Virginia's conversion foundations are a critical resource in addressing pressing community needs and have great potential to make long-term and positive impact in their local jurisdictions. These 14 foundations are as diverse as the regions of the state they represent. Their missions were developed in response to the unique needs of the communities they serve. As such, several foundations have established broad funding categories to encompass the multitude of issues confronted by their communities. Others have devoted their assets specifically to health funding.

All, however, have a significant focus on improving the health and well-being of the residents of their local communities.

Given the process by which the conversion foundations were created, each has adopted a local perspective. In this way, they continue the charitable mission and service area of the entity from which they were created. A defined service area also enables the foundations to increase the impact they are able to have. As shown in Exhibit 1 (and in Appendix A), Virginia's 14 conversion foundations and their service areas include the Central and Coastal regions of Virginia, a portion of Northern Virginia, and some Valley and Mountain areas. In combination, the foundations serve 34% (46/135) of Virginia's cities and counties. It is important to note that, while the foundations can make meaningful contributions to the communities that they serve, their geographic spheres of influence are limited.

A summary of each of the 10 reporting foundations is provided on the following pages, and includes the mission, service area, asset size and fiscal year 2013 grantmaking activities (Note: The foundations' fiscal years vary considerably and may be calendar year, July 1 to June 30, or some other start/stop date). These summaries illustrate the diversity represented by the conversion foundations.

III. FOUNDATION ACTIVITIES TO IMPROVE HEALTH STATUS

In 2013, the 10 Virginia conversion health foundations reporting herein expended a total of $36.6 million on charitable activities. Of this, $26.1 million was targeted to programs and activities to improve the health and well-being of residents. Exhibit 2 provides a foundation listing and the corresponding total FY 2013 grant awards targeted to health and human services. Detailed information about each foundation’s 2013 grant awards, including 458 grant listings, can be found in Appendix B.

All of the conversion foundations had their genesis in a not-for-profit hospital. Accordingly, they have targeted a substantial portion of their grantmaking to supporting health and human service-related activities. The foundations have provided an important and often crucial influx of resources to community-based nonprofit organizations throughout their service areas. In so doing, they have become a key force in addressing some of the most complex and multi-faceted health and human issues facing Virginia’s residents.

The largest proportion of grants was given for projects related to access to health services (55% of non-capital; 44% overall)—a continuing priority for the foundations. This general category includes access to medical, dental and mental health as well as substance abuse services. While serving Virginia’s uninsured is a vital component of the conversion foundations’ missions, it is clear that is not the exclusive focus. The resources under each foundation’s stewardship came from the community it serves, and it is appropriate for the foundations to strive to serve each of their communities as a whole, as opposed to one segment of the population.

IV. OPPORTUNITIES FOR COLLABORATION

Virginia's conversion foundations represent an important resource for addressing pressing health issues at the local level. There are opportunities for collaboration between the conversion foundations and the Commonwealth that could be coordinated to have a greater impact on improving health and increasing access to health care services for Virginians. In looking at these collaborative efforts, it is important to remember that the conversion foundations are focused on addressing gaps in local health systems, as well as enhancing existing health services. They do not intend to assume or finance the core functions of public programs.

- 1. Coordinating efforts to collect and report information on community health status and service needs. It is vital for both the conversion health foundations and the Commonwealth to have an accurate understanding of the health status and service needs of local regions. At the state level, numerous agencies collect information on local health status and service needs. Local health departments, Community Services Boards, and other local agencies often supplement data available from the state on an as-needed basis.

The conversion and other health foundations also have a need for data, and regularly undertake or fund special needs assessment studies to support planning efforts for their service areas. In a collaborative effort, Richmond Memorial Health Foundation underwrote a major update and enhancement of the Virginia Atlas of Community Health (Atlas), which is now maintained with support that includes an additional four conversion and non-conversion health foundations in the state: Danville Regional Foundation, Jenkins Foundation, Virginia Health Care Foundation, and Williamsburg Health Foundation. The Atlas is a web-based application designed to help all Virginians understand the health needs of their communities so they can most effectively target local health improvement projects. (www.AtlasVa.org).

- 2. Avoiding duplication of effort by sharing information about local and other health programs. The conversion health foundations often receive requests to fund projects involving public agencies such as local health departments and community services boards. In evaluating these requests, it is important for the foundations to know how local health programs are organized, financed, and administered so that foundation funding can be targeted to those programs in greatest need. At the same time, it is important for state and local public agencies to be aware of foundation-supported projects and other private sector projects. When one local funding source is not aware of the activities of another, there is a risk of unnecessary duplication in program funding.

The Virginia Consortium for Health Philanthropy (the Consortium), which includes both hospital conversion and non-conversion foundations, meets quarterly to share information and frequently has guest speakers, such as state officials and health policy experts (see Appendix C for a listing of member organizations). These foundations and public agencies can assist each other by sharing information about health-related needs and programs.

- 3. Communicating information about new state-level health initiatives that may have a direct impact on local health care delivery systems. If it is important to share information about existing programs, it is equally critical to communicate about new state-level health initiatives. Some state health initiatives have potentially major implications for local regions and the conversion health foundations. As the foundations plan their grant support programs, they must consider the local impact of these initiatives. At the same time, it is important for the foundations to keep public officials informed of foundation activities as they relate to key state initiatives. At a minimum, this type of coordination can help to ensure that the foundations and public agencies make informed decisions about future policies and programs. The conversion foundations are eager to continue effective collaborative efforts as well as to explore new opportunities for collaboration. One example of such collaboration is Rx Partnership, which was initiated in 2003 to improve access to prescription medicines for the uninsured. This initiative has received support from the General Assembly, as well as most members of the Consortium.

4. Participating in collaborative funding efforts to meet identified needs on local or regional levels. Over the years, members of the Consortium for Health Philanthropy have participated in funding a variety of programs. The type of need, name of the initiative, and foundations participating (names abbreviated) have included:

V. CONCLUSION

Virginia conversion foundations are dedicated to strengthening existing community-based nonprofits and helping to establish new organizations that are critical to addressing the most pressing health-related needs in the state. With the resources available to them, the foundations have much to offer—individually, collectively, and in partnership with the State—toward the goal of improving the health status of many of Virginia’s communities. The foundations welcome and anticipate even higher levels of involvement in the ongoing planning, assessment and improvement of Virginia’s health initiatives.
